

DC++ : Using DC++ : Connection refused by target machine

Question:

Answer:

This usually means that there is no hub running on the machine you're trying to connect to. If you got the address from a hub list, try again later as it might have temporarily been taken down (or it's under heavy load and can't handle your connection at the moment).

This message can also occur when your firewall is blocking DC++.